Crime and Fear in Public Places

Crime and Fear in Public Places consists of an important tool to advance the international urban safety agenda as it provides readers with a view on the debate over safety and public places, taking a multi-disciplinary approach that takes into consideration several fields of knowledge. The cutting-edge research contained in this book incorporates different perspectives on the phenomenon of crime and fear in public places and fosters the co-production of safety, which is a basic principle contained in the Guidelines, thus contributing towards more cohesive societies and safer cities for all.

James Antigua, Head, Safe Cities Programme, UN HABITAT

With expertise from a diverse range of disciplines, this compilation achieves a thorough investigation of how individual mobility, social and built landscapes, and public interest and relate to crime and fear in public places. Insightful and creative, with implications to make communities safer and improve public health.

Professor Douglas Wiebe, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, USA

Numerous organisations call for resilient and safe spaces. Many people dream of enjoying vibrant places. Yet, crime and fear in public places threaten these dreams. This book offers
